SEVERANCE OF THE MURMANSK RAILWAY IS NOW CONFIRMED

Heavily Damaged and Virtually Put Out of Use by Finnish Ski Patrols

AIR BASES BOMBED

Russian Troop Train Crashes Into River, Where Bridge Was Destroyed

By International News Service
HELSINKI, Jan. 4.—Severance of Soviet Russia's vital Murmansk railway line was officially confirmed in Finnish military dispatches today.

The railway was heavily damaged and virtually put out of use by Finnish ski patrols, co-operating with Finland's air force, the messages asserted.

It also was established that sizable fleets of Finnish planes have bombed air bases off the Estonian coast. The planes recently received from England and Italy reportedly participated in the raids.

Cutting of the Murmansk railway was regarded as a crushing blow to the Soviet. In at least one incident, heavy casualties were reported when an entire Russian troop train loaded with reinforcements crashed into a river where a bridge had been destroyed by the Finns. Finnish air attacks on Russian air bases and the dropping of thousands of propaganda leaflets on Leningrad seemed to confirm reports that the 50 planes sent by England and the 20 bombers sent by Italy had gone into action.

Meanwhile Russian artillery resumed its hammering on the Mannerheim Line in an effort to wear out the Finns. Military experts believe, however, that the line would continue to hold out indefinitely.

As expected, the Russian reinforcements appeared to be inexhaustible. News of the railway damage convinced Finnish authorities that Russia would have to abandon the railway and resort to trucking supplies over the snow filled highways.

Nazis Anxious Over War Spread

Berlin, Jan. 4.—Nazi Germany is keenly anxious to prevent extension of the war in Scandinavia, but is equally alive to the possibility of an open Anglo-French aid to Finland. It was stated on reliable authority today.

The declaration came in response to questions regarding reports in Copenhagen and elsewhere that the Soviet Premier and Foreign Commissar Molotov were planning a visit to Berlin to solicit German aid.

It was emphasized that Russo-German consultations are proceeding without interruption so far as Molotov is concerned. A spokesman declared that a visit by him is now "less propitious" than two months ago, when the trip was regarded as highly probable.

Farley Watching and Waiting

New York, Jan. 4.—In the opinion of political experts, Postmaster Farley will assert a powerful influence when the showdown comes on the Democratic presidential ticket for 1940. Next to President Roosevelt, no man in the party has more power than Farley, the experts say.

His silence as Democratic national chairman is an interesting sidelight in the current political situation. Farley is marking time. He has made but one speech, and that a non-committal one, since last July. Farley nevertheless is keeping up his political contacts and answering a flood of communications from all over the country.

Whether he hopes to run for president or vice-president is a matter of conjecture, but it is generally believed he would like a place on the ticket.

Farley cannot commit himself until President Roosevelt may clear his attitude on the third term issue.

Those in the know, say Farley cannot be easily disposed of. More than anyone else, Farley has been responsible for putting Roosevelt in the White House in 1932 and 1936.

Murphy Named to Supreme Court

Washington, Jan. 4.—President Roosevelt today appointed Attorney General Frank Murphy to the United States Supreme Court and simultaneously elevated Solicitor General Robert H. Jackson, to the post of Attorney General.

To the post of Solicitor General, which would be vacated by Jackson, Mr. Roosevelt named Francis Biddle, now a judge on the Third Circuit Court of Appeals, in Philadelphia.

Murphy, 46, and one of the youngest men to be named to the Supreme Court, is known as an outstanding liberal. His appointment gives the court a further pro-liberal and New Deal complexion. Since President Roosevelt lost his fight in Congress to enlarge the Supreme Court in 1937, death or retirements have caused five vacancies. Thus Mr. Roosevelt has named five of the nine justices on the high tribunal. They are Justices Frankfurter, Douglas, Black, Reid and Murphy.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

"Distributed by McNaught Syndicate, Inc."

The Same Old Conflict

Washington, Jan. 3.

THE incurable confusion of the New Deal, which has been its outstanding characteristic from the start, is again illustrated by the present situation in which conflicting forces are pulling in different directions.

THIS Administration is not really radical and it is not really conservative. It is neither one thing nor the other. It tries to go in both directions simultaneously and in the end, of course, it gets nowhere at all. That has been the story from the beginning. Every year in his annual message the President has talked about retrenchment and budget balance and every year the deficit has grown deeper and the debt higher.

IT is true that left-wingers have always pulled a stronger oar than the right but not strong enough to steer a straight course toward their Utopian goals. Always at some stage of the game they were checked, or swung around or slowed down. They have become irritated and angry but never discouraged and it must be admitted the Administration's general direction has been their direction rather than the other. There is no reason to doubt that in the current struggle between the two elements, the advantage will remain, as before, with the radicals.

FOR example, at the moment it is confidently predicted that the President's budget message, so far as business is concerned, will be conciliatory; that he will propose no new regulatory legislation; that he will not scold; that he will

Start Toy Repair Work For Christmas in 1940

The excellent work which was done on the toys sent into the Bristol Community Center before Christmas is being continued so as to give employment to Bristol youths and to get an early start for 1940.

When the toys were distributed to needy families many more could have been given if they were to be had. If you have any broken or discarded toys send them to Bristol Community Center, 115 Franklin street, or call Bristol 3118.

Dolls, toy automobiles, tricycles, airplanes, games and other toys will be very welcome. If enough work is provided by means of toys being repaired it will mean jobs for more youth employed by National Youth Administration and will make it possible for more boys and girls between the ages 18 to 25 to be added to the payroll.

Any young people interested call at the Community Center to see Mrs. Kathryn H. Fretz, NWA County Project Field Supervisor or Albert Hartman, director of the Community Center, to make application for work. The toy project committee under the chairmanship of Marty Green is desirous of continuing the good work that has been going on for the past three months.

JUSTICE LAUGHLIN MAKES RECORD

Bristol Township Official Marries A Total of 698 Couples

3 0 0 1 G E T LICENSES

CROYDON, Jan. 4.—This village of Bristol Township continued to hold its reputation as the Gretna Green of Bucks County when a total of 698 couples walked arm-in-arm to the improvised ceremonial room of Justice of Peace James Laughlin, the "marrying squire."

A new all-time high record for marriage licenses was reached in 1939 in Bucks County when records reveal there were a total of 3001 couples granted licenses.

The total of 3001 for 1939 is a record established during the last year of the term of the retiring Clerk of Orphans Court, Miss Eleanor D. Worthington, of Hartsville, who has been succeeded by Mrs. Adelaide Ross, of Feasterville. The second largest year on record was in 1934 when 2558 licenses were granted. In 1938 only 1828 licenses were issued so that last year's business was a big increase.

Practically every state in the union was represented on Bucks county's "honeymoon lane" leading to Doylestown. Seventy-five per cent of the applicants were non-residents of Bucks county, the big majority coming from Trenton and the Philadelphia section.

Justice Laughlin copped all individual county records in 1939. Since he became a Justice of the Peace 12 years ago, the Bristol Justice has married 4015 couples. During the very first year that he was Justice he married but 28 couples, back in 1928. His biggest year was in 1934 when he married 758 couples but last year was his second biggest.

BOEHRINGER WILL LEAVES ESTATE TO WIDOW OF DECEASED

Newportville Man Had Personal Estate of $25,000, and $5000 Real Estate

WILL IS PROBATED

Joseph Murphy, of Bristol, Granted Letters in Estate of Alexander Anderson

According to the will of the late Fred Boehringer, Frederick Boehringer or Frederick W. Boehringer, of Bristol Township, the $25,000 personal estate and $5,000 real estate holdings will be inherited by his widow, Ida D. Boehringer.

The testator, who died December 20th and executed his will November 30th, left one-third interest in a house and lot in Newportville, in addition to real estate valued at $5,000 and his personal estate. The will was filed in the office of the Register of Wills at Doylestown.

Mrs. Isabelle Shepherd Domm, who died at her home, 33 East Ashland street, Doylestown, December 20, left a personal estate of $25,000 and real estate valued at $5,000, according to her will.

The testatrix, who executed her will April 1, 1937, named the Doylestown Trust Company executor. Two children, a daughter, Betty Shepherd Domm, and a son, Clarence Harry Domm, were bequeathed the homestead at 33 East Ashland street.

The daughter was bequeathed her mother's jewelry, household goods and wearing apparel, and the son will inherit a grandfather's clock and hobby.

The residue of the estate will be placed in trust in the Doylestown Trust Company with the provision that one-half of the income be paid to the daughter and one-half to the son until they reach the age of 25 years when each shall be paid his share of the trust fund.

Mrs. Domm directed that the trustee consult a cousin, Florence Bumm, 1736 West Erie avenue, Philadelphia, with whom the children are to live, if possible, and that she shall be compensated for her efforts.

A caveat has been filed in the Register of Wills' Office by Norman Snyder, of Keller's Church, asking that no will or letters be granted in the estate of his father, Titus A. Snyder, of East Rockhill township, without notifying him. Mr. Snyder died December 23.

In the estate of William F. Morgan, Buckingham township, letters of administration were granted to J. Carroll Molloy, amounting to a personal estate of $800 and real estate which includes a farm in Buckingham township.

The heirs include a widow, Hanna Morgan, Forest Grove; a son, Jesse H. Morgan, Doylestown, and a son, W. Francis Morgan, Furlong.

Joseph Murphy, 316 Jefferson avenue, Bristol, was granted the letters of administration in the estate of Alexander Anderson, Bristol, amounting to a personal estate of $375.

OBEY THE CAUTION LIGHT

Eight Eastern states have come forward with a plan to build a $20,000,000, 400-mile, six-lane superhighway from Boston to Washington. The scheme was first mentioned two years ago, and now representatives of the eight states have agreed to prepare detailed plans for submission to the next session of Congress. The major part of the cost would be carried by the Federal government. Of course.

It cannot be denied that thoroughfares of this type, by-passing congested metropolitan areas or vaulting over them on elevated viaducts would relieve traffic problems, speed transportation and, according to engineers, result in fewer accidents with a consequent saving of lives.

But is this the time for a heavy Federal outlay of this sort? Many think not. National defense, the exigencies of a still-existent depression do not permit the expenditure of scores of millions of dollars to build a road which is not an absolute immediate necessity.

The project sounds attractive to the motorist and is perhaps inevitable. Common sense, though, dictates a "go slowly" policy on additional appropriations in a time of fiscal crisis. Let the nation at least begin to pay the fiddler before it hires an orchestra.

RECREATION

Recreation really means to recreate. In other words, to shake ourselves free from musty habits and start all over again—with a new suit, peripat, anything is recreation that makes man newer or in thought or body.

There are those who get recreation only from sports and out-of-door play. Others get their recreation from some hobby. The manner of method matters little. But we must all get recreation in some way, if we are to remain strong and alert.

Viscount Grey, in his little book on "Recreation," speaks of reading, sports, delightful walks into the woods where the birds sang, of literature in all its phases, and of the many delights of companionship. Speaking of the dark "days" of the World War, he says that he "Found some support in the steady progress unchanged of the beauty of the seasons."

Wherever beauty is, there may be found recreation. Just to walk out among the trees and hear the birds give their familiar songs over and over again and to breathe the pungent breath of the outdoors into the lungs, is to give recreation to the soul.

You must find play in your work if you would grow. And you must grow if you would find life kind. When you think happily you are treating your mind and heart to recreation.

Because he doesn't play ball in the winter time, a Cleveland infielder puts in a claim for the unemployment dole. If it works, the Saint Louis Browns will try it next summer.

New developments arise in the mysterious East. Close perusal of the picture pages reveals that Mr. Gandhi's flatwork is back from the laundry with Gandhi in it.

So the Spec went to the bottom taking with her all the secret device which enabled her to be outlough by a lighter, shorter-ranged foe.

"RED EARTH" by TOM GILL

CHAPTER XXV

Record had been right. Neither Douglas nor his vaqueros had dreamed the raiders would take the field in broad daylight—such a thing had never happened—and for that reason alone Douglas realized his men on top of the mesa might be taken utterly by surprise. Or even worse, if his vaqueros should see this band below them, they might fear for Douglas' own safety and ride down to give battle—a hopeless course against disastrous odds.

There was no alternative—whatever the chances against him, he must outride that throng of horsemen to Miracle Mesa, and eager to make the most of every second, he gave Coronado his head.

Once, standing in the stirrups, he looked back and a gasp of surprise burst from his lips. There, in the very center of that band of pursuing horsemen was one who rode a white horse almost as tall as Coronado, and the rider himself towered head and shoulders over the men about him. Douglas caught the yellow gleam of the rider's poncho. The Killer! Douglas was coming to grips with the enemy at last, and every nerve in his body vibrated at the thought.

They were traveling at convergent angles now—both moving toward the white limestone cliff of the mesa. It was going to be close. In favor of the two horsemen was the fact that the Brotherhood riders were loping easily, apparently waiting for dusk before climbing up to the hacienda—not yet had they distinguished the two figures that galloped between them and the setting sun. But that too was a short-lived advantage. Within a very few minutes after Douglas and Record had emerged upon the desert five horsemen separated from the band and at a wild gallop bore down upon them at a snarl that would intercept the course Douglas had chosen.

"They've seen us," Record wiped the alkali from his lips. "They're sending out their fastest riders to cut us off. Jack, we'd better head back into the hills. I know trails up there no Brotherhood rider ever saw."

But without even looking back Douglas shook his head. "We've got to beat them to the mesa. My vaqueros are up there without warning. If we can't go round those five men, we've got to go through."

The stride of their horses lengthened as they to earth the two animals reared on, Douglas holding Coronado a length ahead, while Record's little pony bent herself doggedly to the task of keeping up with that tall, fleet thoroughbred. Sagebrush and cactus flashed by, the limestone cliffs of the mesa grew more distinct, and minute by minute those two groups of galloping horsemen were drawing closer. The giant leader and the main band of the Brotherhood had fallen well behind, content now to canter along and change their course just enough to prevent their quarry from turning back to the foothills. But those pursuing five were closing in. Even now Record could make out rifles, drawn and ready, in their hands; saw them shielding their eyes against the setting sun, and between tight lips he smiled. "That sun won't help their aim none," he grunted.

Douglas nodded. It would be no small advantage to have their pursuers firing directly into the dazzling sunlight while he and Record, with the sun almost at their backs, could watch those nearing figures with unhampered vision.

The crack of a rifle crashed above the thunder of beating hoofs, and a bullet tossed up the dust ten yards to Douglas' left. They were coming within range.

Dropping the reins across Coronado's neck, Douglas reached for his rifle.

Heads low over their animals' necks, the pursuing horsemen rode less than two hundred yards behind. But the sun, touching the rim of the desert, fell full in their eyes, rendering their aim uncertain, and seeing that their horses were rapidly gaining, they waited for a closer target just as Douglas, swinging in the saddle, brought the rifle to his shoulder and fired three times.

A cry of mortal pain, a horse that rose wildly and fell backwards, a rider sprawling in the sand, and the pursuit had narrowed to four. Another shot. The foremost horse swerved as a bullet struck directly in its path, and in spite of its rider's efforts, turned and made off at a frantic gallop across the plain. Imperceptibly the remaining three slackened as another shot whirled dangerously close, and Douglas returned his rifle to his scabbard.

In instant response the raiders began to fire wildly, the shots going wide, and holding his horse close to Record's, Douglas laid a straight course for the cliff. A quarter of a mile brought them to the foot of the mesa, and looking back, they saw the advance pursuers had reined in to wait for the main band.

"We're trapping ourselves up here," Record protested. "They'll hunt us down like rats."

"They will if we let them reach the top."

"That main band will soon be on its way up, but they can only come two at a time. Your job is to ride straight to the bunk-house. Bring every vaquero back to the edge of the mesa. We'll meet them with a hail of lead that will make them think hell has broken loose."

"But who's going to hold them until I bring the vaqueros?" Douglas took a handful of cartridges from his belt. "That will be my job. One man with a rifle up there can stop the first four or five of them, and they know it. I doubt whether there's that many ready to face certain death in cold blood."

Already they had reached the top, and for the slightest instant Record hesitated, then spurring his jaded pony, disappeared down the road to the hacienda. Without losing a moment Douglas dropped to the ground, and coiling the reins about the saddle horn, struck Coronado's flank with his open hand. In resolute amazement the horse reared, then came back galloping after Record, while rifle in hand, Douglas turned to face the narrow road. Already the rumble of beating hoofs was coming nearer. A matter of seconds now. In two strides Douglas had reached a granite ledge just above the level top of the mesa and crouched low behind its partial shelter.

Dangerous and cool, head a little to one side in that characteristic attitude of quiet expectancy, Douglas waited.

Not long to wait. Riding low, shielding their bodies behind their galloping horses, two men came at full speed around the bend, and seeing the road stretch empty to the top of the mesa, the foremost waved his rifle in a wild gesture of triumph.

Straight up the narrow road they pounded, riding with reddened spurs, while little by little the barrel of Douglas' rifle rose. At the same instant both men saw him. Too late to turn, too late even to swerve aside, and with the impulse of desperation they leveled their rifles at that crouching figure and came head on.

Douglas fired first. Screaming, the nearer horse reared, tottered for a moment, pawing the air, then dropped in the dust, and the rider rolled from the saddle. A flash of fire from the farther horseman, and Douglas felt the sting of powdered rock bite his face. Shifting his rifle, he fired again.

A cry, an arm upstretched against the reddening sky, and the second rider turned slowly in the saddle. Falling backwards, he clung to the outer edge of the road for a sickening second, then toppled from sight over the sheer rampart of the mesa. Half dazed, his companion was still lying in the trail, but now with a gasp of fear he rose to see that menacing figure just above him.

An easy shot, but Douglas made no move, and dragging his left foot, the man hobbled down the road until lost sight of beyond the bend.

Once more the road lay empty and silent in the dusk, then a third assailant rode cautiously into view. For a time he sat his horse, making no attempt to approach, while Douglas watched him over his rifle sights. Silhouetted against a still faintly illuminated sky, the motionless figure was a tempting target, but Douglas did not fire. Every second of delay was in his favor. It would be poor strategy to goad them into rushing. Meanwhile, as if seeking to appraise the number of men who held the road, the lone horseman peered through the gloom of gathering evening, then turning back, rode from view, and laying his rifle before him, Douglas waited.

So those minutes of watchful silence passed, while the world darkened to twilight, then from above him came the welcome clatter of horses' hoofs, and even before Record had thrown himself at Douglas' side, he knew his vaqueros were at hand.

Rising, he looked back at the figures in the dusk. "How many have we?"

"All of us, Boss." It was Bob Russell who answered, and with a low laugh he added, "That ought to be enough to hold this old rock."

"It's none too many. Send some men back to bring up a dozen corral poles. We may find it useful when they rush."

"When'll that be?" Record asked. "Just after dark would be my guess. They're waiting down below the bend now. How many would you say we saw?"

"Fully sixty. They're out for blood to-night."

Douglas nodded. "Just that." He felt easier when his vaqueros began dragging long corral poles into the road and, wiring them together, erected a low barricade.

Losing no time, Douglas stationed his men about the road. "When they do come, they'll probably rush us in a body," he cautioned. "They can't have any idea so many of us are here. Don't fire too soon—wait until you hear them hit the barricade. Then give them all you've got. Shoot low and move a little after each shot. They'll have only the flashes of our rifles to aim at."

With the darkness absolute quiet had settled down beyond the bend. A few stars came out as twilight faded, and night fell so black Douglas could not see his nearest vaquero. Restlessly in their allotted places the men waited, unable to smoke, taut nerves on edge, starting at every slight sound, and once as a trickle of gravel rattled down the steep bank they jumped to their feet, thinking the attack had come.

It came a moment later. No warning reached them until a clatter of horses' hoofs, a scattered volley of shots, and a savage yell announced that the assault was on. Obeying Douglas' orders, his own vaqueros held their fire, but sharp metallic clicks on either side told him every rifle was cocked and ready. The pounding hoofs thundered nearer, the attackers' cries redoubled, then the shrill, frightened whinny of a horse, a curse, and the impact of heavy bodies against the barricade warned the defenders of Miracle Mesa that the raiders had reached the top.

ON THE SCREENS

BRISTOL THEATRE

Thrilling scenes, never before photographed, are a highlight of "Children of the Wild," now at the Bristol Theatre. Among the thrills is a 50-foot leap into a mountain lake by a girl seeking to escape a ferocious lion; the fight between a faithful police dog and his master's murderer; the attack by a mother eagle on a man seeking to rob her nest; the revengeful kidnapping of a small child by the eagle; its subsequent rescue by the dog followed by a huge forest fire.

Full-fledged entertainment, with a good share of wholesomeness, excitement and comedy is Republic's "Sabotage," now at the Bristol Theatre.

RITZ THEATRE

The Ritz Theatre's current bill is of special interest to air racing fans, and to all who thrill to the droning of motors in the sky. Republic's "Flight at Midnight" presents Phil Regan, supported by the ace racing pilot, Roscoe Turner, in a dynamic epic of the air.

Regan, the famous "singing cop" of radio and screen fame, injects red-blooded vigor into his role of mail pilot who has pledged himself to help "Pop" Hussey, manager of a small airport, in raising funds with which to bury high tension wires which surround the field and are subject to condemnation by flight inspectors.

GRAND THEATRE

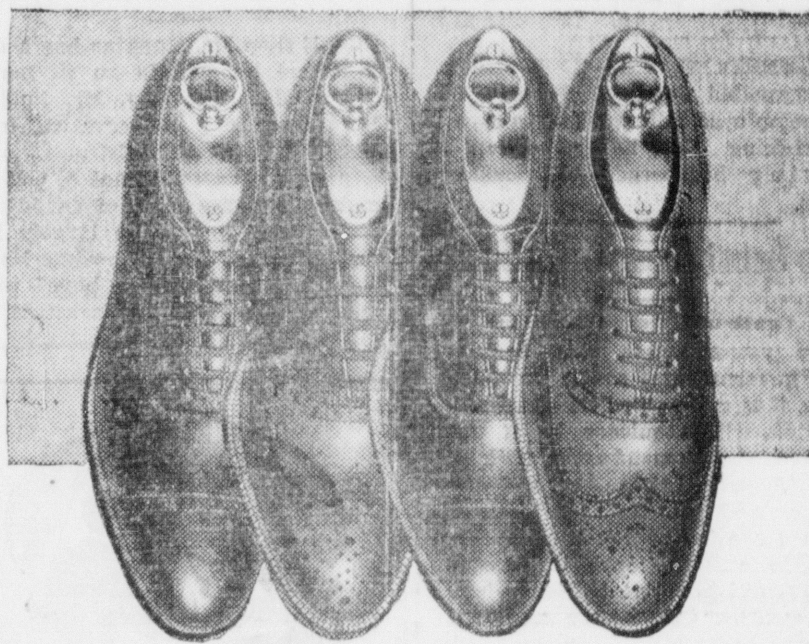

Deanna Durbin grows up another notch in "First Love," which comes to the Grand Theatre today.

Longer skirts, a more adolescent outlook on life, and the first love affair of her screen career, are the defining elements in the "growing-up" program which producer Joe Pasternak and officials at Universal studios have decreed for their young singing star in this picture.

Deanna gets her first screen kiss in "First Love." It will not be of the torrid variety—more of the young-boy-and-girl kind, but definitely a kiss. And, as a mark of the gradual approach of young ladyhood, Deanna receives her first proposal of marriage.

TWO IMPORTANT GAMES BOOKED HERE TONIGHT

Rohm & Haas Five to Line Up Against the Strong Grundy Five

FALLS ALUMNI TO PLAY

Profy Five Will Oppose The Fast-Stepping Quintet From Falls

Two very important games are scheduled for the Bristol Basketball League tonight. In the first encounter, the Rohm & Haas team will meet Grundy's, and in the night-cap, Falls Alumni will line-up against the Profy five.

Rohm & Haas, striving to reach the top-perch of the circuit, has won its last four games and is hitting on all cylinders. The club showed its mettle against the Falls team last week when it won out by seven points after trailing most of the game.

Manager Eagan's team is one game away from second place and a game and one-half away from the league-leading woolen twisters. If successful tonight the chemical workers will creep behind the league-leaders and attempt to wrest away the lead next week.

The return of Johnny Cole and Joe Roe has greatly strengthened the Maple Beach outfit and with these two in there, it makes them almost invincible. Roe and Ralph Cahall do most of the scoring for the Rohm & Haas team while the guarding is attended to by Sammy Smith, Johnny Dougherty, Cole, and Bobby Weidman.

Every time Manager George Hermann signs a player, it means the Grundy team is getting stronger. The newest addition to the woolen workers is Eddie Nowalinski, Morrisville youth. Nowalinski has appeared in the last two games and has proved his worth. Buckman and Zack, also from Morrisville, are high scorers as is Billy Gallagher, carrot-topped forward. Manager Hermann gets plenty of help from Burke, Vanzant and Narcisi.

Having beaten Manhattan in its last start, Falls Alumni after the scalp of all the league leaders. Coach DeRisi feels that his club is still in the running for the gonfalon and in order to reach the top must win at least two out of every three games scheduled. He has played almost two games with every club and still has to meet each twice and if successful in running a streak may climb to the top of the loop.

As the third round of the loop begins, the teams are being more closely bunched. The only club which seems out of the running is the lowly Celtics quintet. The boys of Vito Della are not scoring enough, although they have scared every team in the league.

Both Coach DeRisi and Manager Grimes will use their strongest line-ups for the fray. The last time these clubs met the score ended 48-47 with Falls being the victor. The radiomen are out to avenge the defeat and a closely-fought tilt is expected.

Opening tap-off is scheduled to take place at eight o'clock.

COLEMAN WINNER IN WRESTLING OVER WAGNER

TRENTON, Jan. 4.—Able Coleman, the five-foot powerhouse from California, got himself kicked, kneed, butted and generally bounced around last night, but had the pleasure of winning over Bad Boy Bob Wagner in the feature wrestling match at the Arena.

Wagner was disqualified for his rough handling of both Coleman and Referee Nick Fieri. The first two time Fieri, another five-footer, tried to break 230-pound Wagner's illegal holds, he was slugged to the canvas. The next time he was kneed.

Genuinely hurt, Fieri disqualified Wagner, limped across the ring and raised Coleman's hand as winner. Wagner, of course disagreed. So Coleman answered his invitation to resume action by drop-kicking the big boy around the mat for awhile. Satisfied that he had demonstrated superiority over his arch rival, Able decided to leave. Wagner stayed to raise his right hand high. He got himself pelted with a special Arena mixture of apples, peanuts and oranges for his trouble.

In the other windup Dynamite Joe Cox tangled with Tom Marvin, another crowd baiter. Cox went in for a little horse play himself, tossing the bedraggled referee twice to the mat. After 14 minutes of gymnastics the Dynamiter pinned Marvin with a body press.

Tarzan White, huge New York Giant lineman, stole the show against Ralph Garibaldi in one of the preliminaries. The hairy Giant footballer answered Garibaldi's questionable tactics with a little rough house of his own. White bounced his foe against the ropes, treated him to a series of body slams, and made the Italian say "uncle" after 16 minutes of action.

Tommy Rae, an Arena favorite, fought Don Evans to a 30-minute time limit draw. Evans, once a good boy, was the villain last night. He gave Rae several illegal face massages and slugged the referee, but only once.

Maurice La Chapelle, nimble French Canadian, had entirely too many tricks for plodding Henry Kulkovich in the opening bout. After toying with his opponent, La Chapelle gave him the bounce in 16 minutes.

THIRD WARD WINS; VOLTZ ALSO VICTORS

BRISTOL SUBURBAN LEAGUE

Results of Last Night
Third Ward, 31; Cornwells, 7
Voltz-Texaco, 25; Celtics, 21
Croydon, 28; Shamrocks, 17

Exhibiting one of the most brilliant defenses of the season, the Third Ward quintet swamped King A. A. of Cornwells, last night on the Croydon floor. Final score was 31-7. In other games played, Voltz-Texaco got right behind the league-leaders with a 25-21 triumph over the Celtics and Croydon trimmed the South Langhorne Shamrocks, 28-17.

So vulnerable was the Pikers' defense that in the first half of the game the King team made but one point. A foul by Kelly, Kelly missed three other tries in this half. The Cornwells five scored three points, all by Vandergrift in the third period and Johnson scored a double-digger in the final period.

While all this was going on the Third Ward team was having a grand time hitting the cords. Dugan, flashy guard, made seven field goals and converted both of his foul tries for sixteen points. The win was the third straight for Third Ward.

Voltz-Texaco rebounded after its flogging last week and handed the Celtics a defeat, 25-21. Two field goals by Berry in the last quarter gave the gasoline boys the triumph. Berry had six field goals for his night's work, topping Crohe by three points. For the losers, Barbetta and Dick played the best ball.

Croydon Y. M. A. broke into the win column by taking the measure of the Langhorne Shamrocks, 28-17, despite the playing of the McGrath brothers. Joe McGrath scored eleven points for his club which went to waste. Harry McGrath did fine work on the defense.

But it was really Kelly and Bishop, high scorers for Y. M. A., who did the damage. Kelly had eleven and Bishop, seven points, to account for eighteen of the victors' points.

urge retrenchment and heavily cut governmental costs. In addition, it is understood the Administration will acquiesce in, if not urge, certain amendments both to the Wagner Labor Act and the wage-and-hour law. All these things are in the conservative direction and are sure to receive conservative support, Republican as well as Democratic, in Congress.

ON the other hand, the radicals are full of plans which, if even a portion of them go through, are calculated to nullify every conservative gain. To mention one, there is the intention of the TNEC to put the great insurance companies on the grill. Those who usually have accurate inside information of the inner circles report that a real bomb shortly will be exploded under the insurance companies in the shape of a voluminous report in which a concrete and specific indictment of insurance-company methods will be made.

THIS, it is hoped, will be followed by a new "investigation" which will open the door for legislative action of a disciplinary and regulatory nature. It long has irked the more ardent New Dealers not to be able to control these great pools of money in the hands of the insurance companies. It is this capital they contend that should be "put to work" and part of their charge against the companies will be that these great accumulations are allowed to remain idle. Of course, the companies have a complete and adequate answer to this, but that will not prevent them from being hauled over the coals.

ANOTHER place where the radical influence is dominant now, strangely enough, is in the Department of Commerce. This is the department whose basic policy is supposed to promote business recovery, soothe businessmen and bring about better understanding between them and the President. Such was the overadvertised purpose of Mr. Harry Hopkins when first he assumed charge and certainly there were a number of gestures in that direction. They did not, as it turned out, mean much, but, at least, they were made.

SINCE then Mr. Hopkins has been sick and he still is an ill man. The Under Secretary, Mr. Noble, it is true, is a conservative, but Mr. Noble is an administrator (and a pretty good one), not a policy maker. Policies of the department have now come to be largely in the hands of the left-wing New Dealers. The "bright boys" are dominant, as will be shown, it is declared, by the annual report of the department soon to be issued. Mr. Hopkins, of course, will sponsor the report, but no one thinks that he has written it. Better than anything since some of the President's earlier speeches, written by the same gifted authors, the report is expected to outline the New Deal attitude toward business.

THE essence of this attitude is that it is essential for government to supervise and control business generally; to assume responsibility for its good behavior. That is exactly the reverse of the conservative belief. It is the reverse of the doctrine recently laid down by the National Association of Manufacturers in their recently promulgated "set of principles" which won general praise for their conciliatory tone toward government and general reasonableness. It seems incredible that a real business recovery can be expected under such conditions. The fact seems to be that, despite the high moral tone and statesmanlike sentences, which will cause general commendation of the President's message, we face another year of administrative futility, in which the moves of one element will be counteracted by the moves of the other element and the general bewilderment increased underneath.
